

Translating Cube: Six Sides of European Literature and Translation

Berlin, 20 - 22 October 2015

Telling European (Hi)Stories

TRANSSTAR EUROPA

The „Translating Cube“ rolls into Berlin (20 - 22 October 2015) for its last station after Krakow, Stuttgart, Ljubljana, Tübingen and Prague. European (hi)stories will be told in presentations, readings, performances, discussions and concerts. Current European literary texts will be presented in their original language and in translation, and in this process of exchange and echo, the boundaries between the original literary text and its translation blur. Already established as well as young artists and translators from eight European countries will shape the translating cube. They will not only show provocative art but will also initiate a dialogue between the generations which will be fed by different worlds of experience and perception.

The „translating cube“ is a project coordinated by the Slavic Studies Department of the University of Tübingen, in cooperation with Literaturwerkstatt Berlin and well as other partners in Poland, Czech Republic, Ukraine, Slovenia and Croatia. The project is funded by the German Federal Cultural Foundation, Robert Bosch Foundation and the Programme for Lifelong Learning of the European Union.

A Tour in the Art of Translation

Ceremonial act in cooperation with the Robert Bosch Foundation for advancing literary translation at the University of Tübingen

The laureate of the Celan prize, Esther Kinsky, writes in her book Foreign Languages: „from the sediments in the crevice between the languages something new, an own little universe of memories, experiences and insights“ grows over the years. On the first celebratory evening of the Translating Cube we will visit this of memories, experiences and insights consisting universe where different facets of translation will be demonstrated.

Elke Erb (Berlin) will read an excerpt from her poem Mäander 2, dedicated to translation, which will also be read in five other languages.

In their introductory words Dr. Maja Pflüger (Robert Bosch Foundation), Prof. Dr. Schamma Schahadat (University of Tübingen), Friederike Tappe-Hornbostel (German Federal Cultural Foundation) and Dr. Thomas Wohlfahrt (Literaturwerkstatt Berlin) will take a look at literary translation from a theoretical and practical perspective.

The keynote speech will be presented by Martin Pollack (Vienna), who will share his experiences and memories as a cultural mediator in a divided and later slowly coalescing Europe of the 20th and 21st centuries. Smodiš (Ljubljana) concerns herself with issues concerning exchange and entanglement in the present day, especially under the influence of concepts such as permanent mobility and medial simultaneity.

The manner in which a translator can fall in love with a text, wrestles with it and may also fail, will subsequently be mimed by Yulia Mykytjuk (Lviv) and Anja Wutej (Berlin).

The poem Abschiedsverse [Parting Verses] by Elke Erb – which will also be presented in five translations into Polish, Czech, Croatian, Slovenian and Ukrainian – again places the polyphony of multi-lingual poetry at the center of attention.

Finally the Bosnian singer Damir Imamović (Sarajevo) will present Sevdah music where he combines the tradition of old Slavic ballads with melodies of Ottoman touring groups and the tradition of European Romanticism.

After the concert there will be a reception.

Polish, Slovenian and Czech Poetry

Reading and discussion with Andrzej Kopacki (Warsaw), Veronika Dintinjana (Ljubljana), and Ondřej Buddeus (Prague)

Andrzej Kopacki's poetry illustrates an entrenched world seemingly paralyzed by stirlessness yet regularly disrupted by “other moods” in its routine, which is also the title of Kopacki's volume of poems which will be released this fall. His enduring, faceted observations of individual things prolong time and outline the moment of pause.

In her volume of poetry Gelb brennt der Forsythienstrauch [Forsythia Burns Yellow] Veronika Dintinjana intertwines an Italian backdrop – a countryside with olive trees, fields of sunflowers and wheat and the urban space with saints, towers and Gothic arches – into fascinating impressions of summer in which people are continually alienated.

Modern images of life, details of the (technical) everyday are generated in the poetry of Ondřej Buddeus in his volume Mauersegler [Swift] (2012). They cause confusion between perception and reality, between a real, acted out and virtual world which also presents itself in unusual optical forms.

Dagmar Leupold will engage in a conversation with Kopacki, Dintinjana and Buddeus and with her translators Marlena Breuer, Jakob Waloszczyk (Kopacki), Anja Wutej (Dintinjana) and Martina Lisa (Buddeus).

Moderation: Dagmar Leupold (Tübingen)

Interpretation: Amalija Maček (Ljubljana)

Star & TransStar: Ulrike Almut Sandig (Berlin) and Hryhorij Semenchuk (Lviv)

Performance and Reading

Ulrike Almut Sandig and Hryhorij Semenchuk will perform their German and Ukrainian poems to music; poems about aerial photography and mined landscapes, about birds with human faces singing in two voices, about fairy tales and girls' dreams, about Russian television, a washed-out November and a spring that drives a Lexus; poems that were created in a war zone in the Ukrainian East and in the furious helplessness of those days.

Participants of the EU-funded project TransStar Europe will read texts from the anthology TransStar Europe: Telling (Hi)Stories

Ukraine: Sashko Ushkalov and Myroslav Dotshynez, presented by Constanze Aka and Stefan Heck

Croatia: Boris Dežulović, presented by Anna Hodel

Slovenia: Miklavž Komelj, presented by Anja Wutej

Czech Republic: Radek Fridrich, Jiří Daniček, Jan Tesnolídek, presented by Martina Lisa and Katka Ringesová

Poland: Tomasz Różycki, presented by Marlena Breuer

Moderation: Tanja Žigon (Ljubljana)

Interpretation: Sofia Onufriv (Berlin)
